Location

Borth-y-Gest is a picturesque, quiet seaside village in Gwynedd, North Wales, just about 1 mile south of Porthmadog on the southern edge of Cardigan Bay and the River Glaslyn estuary. It's known for its scenic charm, Victorian architecture and stunning natural surroundings.

The village sits at the mouth of the River Glaslyn, where the river's final stretch meets the sea. Borth-y-Gest has a horseshoe-shaped sheltered bay with boats moored near the shore and panoramic views across Tremadog Bay toward the Rhinog and Moelwyn mountain ranges.

The village has retained much of its Victorian charm with neat, colourful terraced houses and a peaceful, traditional feel. There are a few bistros, tea rooms and cafés overlooking the harbour – perfect for relaxing with a sea view. The Wales Coast Path runs through Borth-y-Gest and connects to nearby beaches and coastal scenery.

You can enjoy walking along the shoreline and exploring a series of small golden-sand coves that stretch west toward Black Rock Sands, which are especially lovely at low tide. The estuary and bay are great for birdwatching; waders and various migratory waterbirds can be seen on the sands and mudflats.

Before Porthmadog became a major settlement, ships were built in Borth-y-Gest, and its small harbour once played a part in local travel, including guiding travellers across the Glaslyn estuary to Harlech.

Nearby attractions include Porthmadog (about a 15–20-minute walk) is home to shops, pubs, cafés and the heritage Ffestiniog & Welsh Highland Railways. Portmeirion Village, a well-known Italian-style architectural village, is only a short drive away. The vast Snowdonia National Park lies inland, offering hiking, mountain climbing and a wealth of outdoor activities.

Borth-y-Gest has its own primary school, Ysgol Borth-y-Gest, reflecting a close-knit local community.

Borth-y-Gest is a quaint and scenic coastal village — ideal for peaceful walks, gorgeous views across the bay and a taste of traditional Welsh seaside life.
